Finally! All the T's subway, trolley lines are running

T. After weeks of delays and shuttle buses, all subway lines were operational Monday.

A Green Line trolley makes its way through Boston University's campus on Comm Ave Monday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

The T is back... sort of.

Monday marked the first time since February 1 that all subway and trolley lines were operational.

This winter, which dumped more than seven-and-a-half feet of snow on Boston in a three-week period, wreaked havoc on the T's antiquated system. Third rails froze over. Old subway car propulsion motors couldn't handle the snow and went on the fritz, crippling the T's ability to operate.

Delays and cancellations were commonplace, with shuttle buses replacing the subway for some stretches. Commuter frustration was palpable and amid the chaos, MBTA GM, Beverly Scott, announced she was resigning this spring.

As of last week, Scott said it would take at least 30 days to get the T back on track. Things, however, have apparently changed.

On Monday, there was service to all lines. But while all of the track infrastructure is back in service, the T is still working on fixing subway cars.

As of Monday afternoon, there were 438 subway cars and trolleys available for service, up from 364 last Thursday.

MBTA machinists are working "around the clock" fixing the remaining cars — typically, 482 cars are needed to satisfy typical weekday ridership demands, said MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo through an email.

"Until we reach that number, the MBTA will not be at 'full service,'" he said.

The T did not have a cost estimate for the recent string of storms. Pesaturo indicated the MBTA. which is already saddled with $9 billion worth of debt, would be calculating "all of its winter storm-related recovery costs in the coming weeks."

The T estimated that 6.5 million cubic feet of snow and ice had to be cleared from MBTA rights of way so that trolleys and trains could operate. The T has had to look outside the state for snow removal equipment and workers in recent days to clear the tracks. Public agencies from Vermont, Pennsylvania and New Jersey loaned equipment including 72 dump trucks, 33 front-end loaders, 12 skid steers and 11 backhoes.

Gov. Charlie Baker deployed the National Guard and hundreds of soldiers helped the T dig out in recent days. Dozens of inmates were also pressed into shoveling this past weekend.

Arctic attack. Canadian blast to send dangerously cold weather this week

Massachusetts is forecast to be hit with dangerously cold temperatures and wind chills this week as part of an arctic blast moving down from Canada, the National Weather Service said.

Wind chill advisories for much of the state went into effect Monday night and were in place until 10 a.m. Tuesday, when temperatures will remain in the teens and wind chills will fall below zero.

"Make sure your head and hands are covered," Alan Dunham, a weather service meteorologist, told The Boston Globe. "Dress in layers and put a scarf over your face."

Boston is only expected to see flurries Tuesday night into early Wednesday morning, the NWS said.

Temperatures will rise to the upper 20s and low 30s Wednesday, before the bitter cold returns Thursday and Friday, with lows approaching zero. GLOBE

Hernandez trial: Bangs heard near crime scene

Ear-witnesses. Night workers at industrial park recall night of the murder.

Witnesses heard loud bangs that sounded like fireworks in a Massachusetts industrial park where the bullet-riddled body of a man ex-NFL star Aaron Hernandez is accused of fatally shooting was found hours later, according to testimony Monday.

Two employees of Needletech Products Inc, a surgical needle manufacturing company in North Attleborough, Massachusetts, testified they heard the sounds between 3 a.m. and 3:30 a.m. on June 17, 2013, during breaks from their overnight shifts at the company.

"I heard a loud bang, four or five times," said Barbara Chan, a Needletech machine operator, who had been taking a nap in her car. "I thought it was fireworks. ... It was two slow ones and three fast ones."

The body of Odin Lloyd, a semiprofessional football player who had been dating the sister of Hernandez's fiancée, was found by a teenaged jogger later that day.

Hernandez, who lived less than a mile from the industrial park, has been charged with Lloyd's murder and various firearms offenses. If convicted, he faces a maximum penalty of life in prison.

Hernandez, 25, had a $41 million contract with the New England Patriots when he was cut from the team shortly after being arrested in June 2013.

City takes hit on parking meter income

Snowed over. The city lost money this month on metered parking spaces.

The monumental snow of the last few weeks has put a freeze on city revenue, as unused parking meters sat cold and coinless next to vacant snow-piled slots.

Boston raked in just $443,900 between January 15 and February 12 – a little more than half the meter revenue it received during that time last year – according to Bonnie McGilpin, a spokeswoman for Mayor Marty Walsh.

The drop in parking meter revenue is a result of the snow emergency parking bans necessary to remove the historic amount of snow from the city's streets, McGilpin said. It is also due to some parking meters have remained buried with snow.

It's not yet known what the financial repercussions will be for the city.

"Snow removal operations for the City of Boston are still ongoing and therefore, it's too early to accurately estimate the impacts on the city's budget," McGilpin said.

"Mayor Walsh has said that the priority is public safety and ensuring that residents can safely get to school and work."

McGilpin didn't directly address reports that Walsh was planning to go easy on towing illegally parked vehicles, but said city officials have encouraged residents to sign up for text, email, and voice alerts to receive notifications about street cleaning and upcoming snow emergencies to avoid unnecessary towing and ticketing.

Tsarnaev jury selection delayed for undisclosed reasons

Jury selection did not go on as planned Monday in the trial of the Boston Marathon Bombing suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev. A court official did not give any reason for the suspension, and said only, "jury selection was postponed today at the direction of the court."

Tsarnaev / JANE FLAVELL COLLINS

The unexplained cancellation came just days after the court announced that jury selection in the trial was slated to wrap up by the end of this week, with opening statements expected next week — more than a month after they were to originally take place.

Jury selection was expected to resume today at 9 a.m., the court said.

Nearly 250 potential jurors have been interviewed so far.

The judge in the case is also expected to hear motions related to evidence this week, the court said. METRO

Snow death

Man dies after falling through Canton skylight

A man was killed Sunday afternoon when he fell through a skylight while assessing snow removal needs at a Canton building.

The man, who was not identified, was one of two people on the roof at the time of his fall. He plummeted about 40 feet to the ground, the report said.

It was the second such incident to happen in Canton in the last week. A man died Wednesday after falling from a commercial building while clearing snow.

There have been 147 reports of roof collapses or damages since Feb. 9, the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency reported.

Twenty-three of those incidents occurred Sunday after a rain and ice storm added extra weight to snow-filled roofs. GLOBE

Copley Square

No bail for slaying suspect

Michael Jordan, the 27-year-old Roxbury man who prosecutors allege shot Ahmir Lee to death in Copley Square in August, 2013, is being held without bail.

Prosecutors said Monday patrons of a Copley restaurant thought the gunshots were firecrackers until they saw Lee run onto Boylston Street and collapse. Witnesses described a man wearing a blue shirt firing a gun at Lee.

He then ran from Boylston to Clarendon Street, where he put a gun in his waistband and hopped into a waiting cream-colored ragtop 1991 Chrysler New Yorker. The car was later identified as being registered to Jordan.

Surveillance video and cellphone tower records placed Jordan in the Copley area on the night of the slaying, officials said. Text messages between Jordan and his wife and friends refer to the murder. METRO

Using your break to make a difference

Service. Some students aren't partying during their vacations.

School breaks are often looked at by college students as a time to party, catch up on sleep or hang out with high school friends. But for some, it's the perfect time to give back.

"I've learned so much about how much a strong community makes a difference," says Julia Thompson, a junior at Merrimack College in Massachusetts. In January, Thompson was one of several students who lead a service trip to Washington, D.C., where they worked with organizations that serve the homeless.

"Last year, we did a lot of outreach to soup kitchens and helped with preparing the food," Thompson says. For this trip, she and her group lived in a D.C. hostel where they cooked and prepared all of their own meals.

"It's a time to learn new things," says Thompson, who is a human development major. "I'm hoping to be a school counselor and it gives me a chance to immerse myself in the experience."

Preparing for the trip

Thompson explains it takes months of planning and fundraising to make the weeklong trip happen. "Once a week, we had meetings about what service, community and simple living means," Thompson explains. "We have speakers and group discussions and a letter writing campaign where we ask for possible donations."

Building a skill set

Thompson also notes that she and the other students embraced the opportunity to gain some real-life work experience. "I lived a pretty sheltered life growing up," Thompson, who grew up in nearby Cohasset. "Immersing myself in the work was great."

Working with the community

Boston University also has both winter and spring break trips as part of its Alternative Service Break program.

Among the Winter Break projects was a chance to work with the Gavin Foundation in Boston on public health initiatives. "It's a really interesting opportunity to give back to the community that you live in," says Kelsey Krook, a program manager at BU's Community Service Center.

1 Look out, Hollywood, here comes Tom Brady

Hey, Tom Brady, you were just named the NFL's Super Bowl MVP. What are you going to do now? Head for Hollywood, apparently. According to the fine, reputable folks at Star magazine, Brady is reportedly mulling over an acting career once he retires from football, because why not? "At 37, Tom knows he only has a few seasons left before retirement. He's thinking ahead and believes he could become a huge movie star," a source says. "He's used to being a superstar. After winning the Super Bowl again, he's thinking about new challenges outside of football." Only one problem, though. His wife, Gisele Bundchen, is said to be not so hot on the idea, if only because of the potential for him to spend time onscreen with attractive female co-stars. But let's not get ahead of ourselves.

3 That Kylie Jenner and Tyga thing? Not so much.

Tough breaks for Kylie Jenner. The 17-year-old reality personality has been "crying all week" over the state of her relationship with 25-year-old rapper Tyga, according to Radar Online. "She is afraid that Tyga is going to break up with her," a source explains. And with good reason, I'd imagine, since Tyga himself said they aren't dating. And he's apparently been getting pressure from his management team to keep his distance from Jenner, which may or may not have something to do with the stink Amber Rose was raising about the pairing last week. "Tyga's advisers have told him to not be spotted out in public with Kylie doing anything romantic, including holding hands, or kissing," the source says. "Tyga has tried to reassure Kylie that they are solid, but she has her doubts." And now I'm off to feel terrible about myself for spending this much time focusing on the dating life of a 17 year old. Toodles!

4 Hilary Duff's divorce finally going forward

Hilary Duff has finally filed for divorce from hockey player Mike Comrie a year after they initially announced their separation. And if that doesn't seem like a long enough time to get the paperwork in order, on the filing itself Duff lists their actual date of separation as January 2013, according to TMZ. But hey, you have to be methodical in these things, right? Duff cites the old standby, "irreconcilable differences," for the split, and she's looking to make sure he doesn't get any piece of her finances or earnings, since they reportedly have a prenup. You'd think that would've helped speed things along, though.

Interview with the awkward vampire

Jemaine Clement plays a vampire out of a bodice ripper novel in "What We Do in the Shadows." / PALADIN FILMS

Q&A. Jemaine Clement digs into the vampire trend with the mockumentary 'What We Do in the Shadows.'

"Flight of the Conchords" star Jemaine Clement is taking on the vampire phenomenon, teaming up with co-director and best friend Taika Waititi for "What We Do in the Shadows," a mockumentary chronicling the daily — or nightly — lives of four everyday undead bloodsuckers living in Wellington, New Zealand.

Were there specific challenges in constructing a narrative as a documentary?
Yes, I think so. We were trying to get some action scenes in it, stuff like fights and special effects and let people improvise. But it also frees you up for things. The way we did it was we wrote a script, but we didn't show it to any of the actors. Because when people try to act like they're in a documentary, I feel like you can tell. People just don't talk how they would talk.

So then how much of that original script is the same as what you ended up with?
That's a great question, and I don't know. I would be interested to see that, to see how similar they are. But I haven't ever compared them. I haven't looked at the script since.

Were there any vampire elements or cliches you wanted to avoid referencing?
We've got "Twilight" references in it, which I kind of regret. While we were filming it, the last "Twilight" movie was coming out, and we wanted to get a shot of them taking down the "Twilight" poster as Nick is getting over being a vampire, saying this vampire trend of the teens has gone again and you have to wait for the next one. We did have lots of references of how being a vampire becomes cool and then it becomes cheesy, and how that affects their lives. They're cool for a while and then they're not. But that dropped out.

But no sparkling jokes.
We did film some. We had them in the sunrise and they burst into flame, and I'm going, "F—, I thought I was going to sparkle!" But the special effect didn't quite work. They had to wear these gloves that look like hands so they could light on fire, and the gloves were so thick it just looked like their hands had swollen to look massive.

Teamwork

How was it co-directing with Taika Waititi?
We're used to working with each other, and we talked about the idea for so long that we had very similar ideas of how it was going to be. Amazingly, we never argued. But when we first started doing theater shows, there were times that I thought we were going to punch each other — even onstage. But those kinds of conflicts have been worked out.

The truth about pregnant sex

Expert advice. We give you four reasons why you should get busy.

Pregnancy is an interesting nine months where your body does some pretty wacky things. (Hello, nonstop gas and varicose veins!) But perhaps one of the best side effects of being knocked up is an increased desire to have sex.

Yep, you read that right — it isn't uncommon for pregnant ladies to feel particularly randy, especially during the second trimester. Even so, some preggo women and their partners might be freaked out by the idea of pregnant sex.

"It takes about 10 months to cook a baby, which is a long time to not have sex," says Pittsburgh-based OB-GYN Dr. Draion Burch (aka Dr. Drai). Unless your experiencing pregnancy complications or your health care provider is concerned about you going into early labor, Dr. Drai says sex during a regular, low-risk pregnancy is perfectly safe. In fact, he encourages it.

It's a chance to emotionally connect with your partner

Excessive weight gain paired with the classic physical changes that go hand in hand with pregnancy might leave some women feeling self-conscious when it comes to having sex. However, Dr. Drai says that physical intimacy is a crucial part of any relationship.

"Sex during pregnancy helps maintain that emotional connection with each other," he says. "And sometimes men can get kind of weird with pregnancy because they feel like the woman is all about the baby, instead of being all about them."

Dr. Drai adds that making time for physical intimacy — whether through intercourse, foreplay or just cuddling — should be a priority. Plus, once you are recovering from childbirth and caring for a newborn, sex will likely be the last thing on your mind. Try taking advantage of this calm-before-the-storm time to have sex.

O cool!

You'll have better orgasms

During pregnancy, blood flow naturally increases throughout the body — including the nether regions. "There's a lot of blood flow to the pelvis, which actually makes it easier to reach orgasm when you're pregnant," says Dr. Drai, who adds that this contributes to heightened sensitivity to sexual stimulation. "Because of this, a lot of my patients say sex is great while pregnant."

It might make for an easier labor

Will regular sexual activity throughout your pregnancy help you have a smoother delivery? Drawing on his own experience, Dr. Drai seems to think so. "I think that for women who have sex throughout their pregnancy, their labors are easier for a vaginal delivery," he says.

PLUS

Relax

You'll feel less stressed

"Sex, in general, improves things like anxiety, sleep and depression," says Dr. Drai. "It's also been found to boost your immune system, help fight heart disease, make your skin look great, and even make you live longer."

Toys. The iconic doll takes on a new roll as Barbie in Princess Power

Barbie has held down more fictional careers than most any doll, but according to a new survey, little girls aren't just looking for a pretty doll to play various roles, they want her to kick some serious butt. Mattel surveyed 2,400 girls between the ages of 3-and-10-years-old and found 90 percent of them wish there were more superheroes for girls. With that in mind, the toy company created Barbie in Princess Power, which shows Barbie in a totally new way.

The Princess Power Barbies are styled in bold-colored outfits and sparkling capes. This is a superhero, who fights crime in knee-high heeled boots and has silky hair with rainbow streaks.

THE BARBIE IN PRINCESS POWER LINE INCLUDES DOLLS, DVDS AND KID-SIZED COSTUMES.
PROVIDED

Instead of the typical Ken doll, the Princess Power line has a beefy looking male reporter, who wears dark glasses, a shirt, tie and jeans. There are crime fighting animals — plastic dogs and cats with their own capes and masks, as well as DVDs. The hope is Barbie in Princess Power will help kids find their inner heroine and give them a way to play out their own superhero stories. Parents can learn more at BeSuper.com.

Letters to the editor

A poem that speaks to us all

Please Mother Nature,
won't you give us a break?/
We're up to our ears in flake upon flake/ The white stuff keeps coming, ton after ton/
Where's your compassion, or do you have none?/ There's no need to set records, if that is your goal/ We'd be quite content with endless Old Sol/
Some say the planet is getting too hot/ But what you've been doing gives proof that it's not/ So dear Mother Nature, consider this plea/ Hurry up with fair springtime, and a hero you'll be.

Focus on science, not shirts

Re: 'Yo Hollywood We Need More Girls in Stem' (Metro, Feb. 19) The author of the piece, Jenna Busch, claims sexism in the case of scientist Matt Taylor's clothing choice. "Anyone remember scientist Matt Taylor's choice of a shirt full of scantily clad ladies during the broadcast of the historic landing of a ship on a comet? Classy, sir." The author's logic in this case is completely sexist — women should be focusing on a man's clothing choice rather then the amazing feat of science that occurred? If Miss Busch would like to empower young women, maybe she should educate them on science and math — rather then projecting the image to your readers that women should focus on clothing choices, children's toys, and other existing sexist stereotypes. Her view is almost comically ironic and myopic, and I am saddened another article makes women appear to focus on a scientist's "choice of shirt" (however, unprofessional) rather then getting young girls excited about science. Miss Busch should write an article about women in said fields; this will objectively show young girls success in science is not gender-specific.

NFL exec pumps the brakes on the Mariota express

NFL Draft. Philly is likely the only team that could make Marcus Mariota a star right away.

Marcus Mariota may have impressed scouts at the NFL combine this past weekend, but one NFL executive cautions that there is still work to be done for the former Heisman winner to become a Pro Bowl quarterback.

Coming out of a college offense at Oregon that looked nothing like a pro-style setup, Mariota may have a hard time replicating his big numbers from college, at least at first. According to one NFL executive, the transition period for Mariota might mean he's not ready to be an instant starter, even if he is likely thrust into a starting role much faster than that. Mariota is considered a consensus top 10 selection and could fall to the New York Jets at No. 6 or could be a trade option for the Philadelphia Eagles, a move that would reunite him with his college coach, Chip Kelly.

"He has operated in the shotgun virtually his entire career," the executive told Metro. "He's operated in a lot of pre-snap reads, not a lot of post-snap reads. When he goes elsewhere with the football, it's in a scramble setting. He hasn't called a play in three years. In college he was taught he doesn't have to throw into that picture, it's too tight. In the NFL, they're going to have him make those throws to the opposite shoulder. The picture he is taught in college just isn't there in the NFL.

"He may prove to be a 10-year answer for somebody, but there's going to be a period of adjustment, unless he goes to the Eagles. All the other teams have to realize that they can build in some elements, but there will be an incubation time here with him."

The executive, who has a background in player personnel, gives Mariota a "first-round grade" along with Jameis Winston, a player who seems to be currently consolidating his stock as the top pick in the NFL draft. But there will be bumps along the way for both quarterbacks, he cautions, and more so for Mariota.

One thing that sticks out about Mariota is that in Oregon's offense they ran a high percentage of pre-snap reads, meaning that he knows before the ball is snapped where he is going with his pass. He also benefitted from an offense where targets are always open and where the first-read is very often the easiest pass.

MLB. Sox make waves with Moncada signing

The Red Sox appear set at second and third base for the foreseeable future with Dustin Pedroia and Pablo Sandoval in the mix, but that didn't stop the club from inking one of the hottest prospect names available. The Sox reportedly reached an agreement with 19-year-old, switch-hitting Cuban infielder Yoan Moncada for a bonus of around $30 million.

"He's a five-tool player in the limited amount I've seen him play," fellow Cuban Rusney Castillo, who is slated to be Boston's starting center fielder this season, told ESPN. A National League executive likened Moncada to — if he were to hit his ceiling — a "Robinson Cano-type," according to ESPN. METRO

She's a finder and a keeper. Are you?

The State Treasurer's Office oversees over $2 billion in unclaimed money. Some of it may be yours.

"Seeing my name on the list was a huge surprise. It was so exciting to find out that I had money waiting for me from a bill I'd overpaid eight years ago! I called the office, and the staff helped me file a claim in under ten minutes. Now, I'm reunited with my cash and plan to treat my husband to a fun night out!"
